

John H. Rofferty in Chicago Record-Herald.

"SPEAKING of luck versus cunning," said Captain Toole, the former detective, "the biggest reward I ever got and the best piece of work I ever did were both realized by a stroke of blundering luck. I was coming fast in the Scotland Yard service, when the De Munn-Russell robbery took place in Chelsea. It was really the beginning of a remarkable series of robberies committed upon members of the rich St. Vrain club, a gambling alive for the elderly swells the fourishd twenty years ago in Pall Mall. The eute thieves found out the doings that went on in the club rooms, shadowed the winners as they left during the night, and either robbed them in the dark highways or followed them and bazars of England, and I took Haney, my partner, to Paris with me to help take care of my prisoner. "The way the 'Cardinal' acted all this time was a puzzle for me, and I admit it freely, he fooled me. He was a Frenchman in Paris, and when we found that Captain Russell and his friend had left for Monte Carlo, but would return in a fortnight, Kinney and I spent our time searching the shops with the aid of the Paris police. Haney watched the depots for our friend, the captain, and my prisoner seemed to get so interested in the work of locating the jewels and the men and firms who traffic in such contraband riches, that I began to doubt whether, after all, he was not the burglar. To make a long story short, we found the whole swag in a shop in the Rue St. Martin, and my prisoner almost as glad as I was. The game had been upset, but the descriptions I had of the metal work put all doubt out of my head. I telegraphed to Colonel De Munn-Russell to come at once to the Hotel Continental, and was delighted the same afternoon to hear from Haney that Captain Russell had arrived.

"To show how stupid I really was in those days my plan now went wrong, than to confront Kinney, my burglar, with Captain Russell, who, I felt sure, would identify him positively. Then the old colonel would identify the jewels separately and collectively. Without explaining any of the principals, but when the French wasn't, an abundance of wild game and meat, that are nutritious and highly flavored. A climate where even a delicate person can, without taking cold, spend ten of the twelve months in the open air needs few accessories in the work of restoring impaired health or vitality. Great numbers of semi-invalids already go to California to escape the cold of the eastern winters, and find to their constant surprise that a great part of a California winter is almost an exact counterpart of the balmy days of an eastern spring.
